

Social Media: Comment on using Davinci Resolve on Linux Deleted

David Conner

May 6, 2023

Contents

I am using org-mode to export this to PDF, which will be faxed to Google's office at +1 650-253-0001, since there is no way to actually get someone to look at my complaint. If I want, I will fax this to YouTube every day until I get a response.

I got screwed out of $75 by Apple, since they wouldn't refund me after doublecharging me for a Tidal subscription. I am tired of not having any voice in your platforms or products. You can do whatever you want with impunity and there is no recourse for the user.

I watched a video on using Davinci Resolve on Linux. Here is the URL.
<https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=4Wl0oYYgbuM>

I wanted to give the creator some advice on using Silverblue or uBlue. I am also going through some issues with OpenCL reliability on Linux. Since this is an average person with some experience and not a developer, I wanted to spend time making sure that if I recommended some experimental distribution, that I included enough information to not send the user down the wrong path.

In the past, if I included any URL, the comment was deleted and made unrecoverable with zero indication as to why. You cannot survive without your users. The data they submit to your applications gives you power. So you delete my content without any notification because some spam filter flags it? Are you serious? If the creator deleted it, that sucks, but that is their decision. If an automated process deletes my content, it has wasted my time and my energy. I should make better decisions and not waste the time providing you with data.

It is insulting to think that simply because Silicon Valley's social networks vastly outcompete any remotely similar products, you are propped up as monopolies and smear any competitor that begins to develop their own digital social network.

The only reason I have not deleted YouTube itself is for the lectures from channels like Simon's institute. I deleted Facebook, Twitter and Instagram a long time ago. I realized that because of my diverse interests and posts about esoteric topics, Facebook's algorithm was just zeroing out my publication. I was constantly shadowbanned – just for being intelligent and wanting to find other people to talk to.

I may delete YouTube anyways. I should be reading to learn, instead of wasting my time watching videos. Why would I not, if your algorithms cannot bother to value my time as a living, breathing person who does not want to feel like they don't exist?

I wasted about an hour typing with my thumbs. The content was about 800 words. Your app's mobile text entry sucks and encourages crappy 12-word comments with zero real value. By implicitly discouraging intelligent & descriptive responses to others online, you drive the political divide in America.

- I am so tired of being made invisible on social media.
- I am so tired of being subject to passive aggressive policies on social media.
- I am so tired of my politics being mischaracterized.

Respectfully not yours,
David Conner